The district attorney's summing up was a comprhensive and forceful re view of all the evidence adduced. He declared at the outset that romance and sentiment did not enter into the issue: It was not a question of Stanford White's character, or Evelya Thaw's suffering, it was a plain matter of fact hodicide.

Clearly Tenderloin Murder.

"A common, cowardly tenderloin murder," as he termed if. The expression "dementia Americana," made by Attorney Delmas at the very close of his argument was attacked by the district attorney, and he repeatedy referred to it in tones of sarcasm.

Mr. Jerome dealt mercilessiy with Evelyn Thaw, to whom he referred as the "angel child," and to Thaw, when he termed alternately "St. George" and "Str Galanad."

"Str Galahad."
The atmosphere about Thaw and the members of his family was heavy with gloom during the judge's charge. The defendant sat in a dejected mood, his head bowed, his face pallid and his entire appearance denoting a nervous apprehensive state of mind. It seemed as though every vestige of hope had been taken away from him. All the confidence and cheerfulness which were so strongly in evidence yesterday had disappeared cendidence and cheerfulness which were so strongly in evidence yesterday had disappeared.

Fear and doubt had supplanted them. A complete change had come over him by the time the judge had concluded his charge. He began to realize that real danger menaced him; that his accultar was by no means a fertainty, and as he was led out of the courtroom the debonair style which marked his entrance yesterday morning had entirely disappeared. The members of Thaw's family were equally as low in spirits. They recognized the fact that the charge was by no means favorable to Harry; they could not even construct it that way. None of Thaw's counsel would discuss it, but they shared in the general opinion that it was unfavorable to their client.

Shortly after visiting Harry in the pen, Mrs. Evelyn Thaw left the building with Dan O'Reilly, after telephoning for a moment. Thaw's counsel denied a report that the best they hoped for was a hung jury.

Jerome Pities Thaw's Mother.

The poor fellow thought the judge "The poor fellow thought the judge would simply tell the jury to let this St. George, this Sir Galihad go, and that's all there would be to it. Now, I understand he is sitting in his cell, all in a mess, his head bowed, worrying about the outcome. I'm really sorry for him, but more so for his mother."

sorry for him, but more so for his mother."

The Thaws remained in the courthouse for a short time after the jury had retired, and then the family, with the exception of the younger Mrs. Thaw, returned to their hotel for dinner. The young wife remained and had dinner with Attorney O'Reilly at a nearby restaurant. The others returned shortly after 8 o'clock, and went to the Tombs waiting-room. The jury at 7 o'clock went to the Broadway Central Hotel for dinner and returned to the courthouse at 8:52 P. M. They immediately went to the consultation room, where they continued the discussion of the verdict.

When it became apparent that there was no possibility of a decision being reached by 9 P. M. Justice Pitzgerald went home and left word that he would return whenever the jury desired him.

EVENTS IN THE THAW CASE.

June 25, 1906—Harry K. Thaw shot and killed Stanford White, during performance of "Ma'amselle Champagne," on the Madison Square Roof Garden.

January 23, 1907-Thaw's trial for murder began before Justice James Fliz-

From that date until February 1st was consumed in selecting the jury, part of the delay being due to several being excused after their selection.

First delay in case on February 14th, when wife of Juror Joseph B. Bolton died. Trial was resumed February 18th.

Jurors, who had been closely confined prior to this last date, were allowed freedom after.

During the trial seventeen expert alienists for and against the prisoner appeared as witnesses, one of whom, Dr. Evans, is responsible for the new much-quoted term "brain-storm."

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, wife of prisoner, began telling her story to the jury February 8th, and, with few interruptions, continued until February 18th. Her rigid cross-examination by District Attornoy Jerome was begun February 19th, and concluded on the morning of February 27th.

Trial continued until March 244, when interrupted by appeal to court by Jerome for appointment of lunary commission to examine into Thaw's sanity during trial.

Commission appointed by Judge Figure 14.

ommission appointed by Judge Fitzgerald March 26th, consisting of ex-Mogran J. O'Brien, Peter B. Olney, an attorney, and Dr. Leopold, J. Judge O'Brien declined appointment, and David McClure was at named in his stead.

Commission, after personal examination of Thaw, reported April 4th, that he was sane in so far as he was able to conduct his case was concerned.

April 8th—Trial was resumed when taking of testimony was concluded, and Delmas began to sum up, concluding April 9th.

April 10th—Jerome argued case, and Justice Fitzgerald charged jury. Case was given to jury at 5:17 P. M.

Thaw did not take a seat, but chose to walk about the rear of the auditorium, leaving his wife to sit with Mr. McCaleb and Mr. Beale. He was pale and covited looking, and attracted attention as he walked nervously back and fourth, staggering at times as though he was intoxicated. It was while Thaw was pacing the aisle at the far western end of the auditorium that Mr. White entered the roof garden. He was alone, but as he took a seat he was greeted by Harry Stevens, a caterer, who chatted with him for a moment. When Mr. Stevens left, he turned his attention to the performance on the stage and was deeply engrossed in the play, when Thaw caught sight of him. The lights at this time were low and made it difficult to redognize anybody at a distance. The Eatal Shot. The Fatal Shot.

The Fatal Shot.

From the rear of the auditorium Thaw watched the architect for a short time, and then gradually thrended his way through the maze of tables toward the saot where he was sitting. Other than his deathly pallor, there was nothing about his appearance to arouse suspicion.

He walked slowly up to the table at which Mr. White was sitting and stood for a bare moment facing him from the other side. Mr. White looked up and half rose.

With a multered imprecation, the young man pulled a revolver from his pocket and in a flash had leveled it at the breast of the man he regarded as his enemy. Mr. White's body fell to the floor on its left side, with the left arm under the face.

In beginning his address, Mr. Bryan paid his respects to Mr. Graves and what his add said. He complimented Mr. Graves in the lighest manner for his honests and his holdress, and said that if there was any place in the world where also absolute freedom of speech sould prevail, it ought to be he a Democratic gathering, it is added that from the heard Mr. Graves had retired from the half because there night he doubt about the wisdom of what had been should be delivered that the speech should be delivered that he speech should be delivered Turning directly to the subject of Mr. Graves a recommendation, Mr. Bryan said:

Gravers recommonation, Mr. Bryan said:

"As at present advised, I shall not present the name of Theodore Roosevelt to the National Democratic Convention, Bear in mind, I say 'as at present advised."

Mr. Bryan contended that If after mature consideration and reflection, and the presentation of the arguments he should feel that his duty lay in that direction, he would present Mr. Roosevelt's manne, even though it should prove to be the last act of his life. He then went on to say that if any Republican was to be selected by the Democrata to head their mational ticket, the man should be Senator La Follette of Wisconsin Mr. Bryan then proceeded with his speech, presenting reasons why in his opinion Mr. Roosevelt was not the proper man for the ptesidency.
